would rest his defence, he said, upon a re-son of thirty-eight years; and though he had taken care of a good many sick, it was true, yet he always followed the prescriptions of other doctors, and never wrote any himself. After endeavouring to show that he was no quack, but that he had done quite as much good as the most eminent of the faculty, he concluded as follows:—“I have conscientiously recommended to my friends, and, though I never took any money, I have done good service to humanity, and of this I call to witness the noble testimony of my labours. I solemnly call upon my friends to corroborate me—the word which, had it not been for me, would have saved the death of an amiable and estimable woman—the mother of an interesting and virtuous family.”

The court, after some deliberation, gave the following decision:—“Considering the mental state of the accused, and that the evidence did not sufficiently prove that de Bonis had procured the medical profession, we dismiss the charges.”

Upon hearing this decision the defendant seemed in an ecstasy of joy, and with a loud voice cried out, “Long live the king, the president, and the court, the royal family, and the magistracy!”

M. Foudrey, the counsel to the defendant, had made all this noise, then rose to explain some part of his conduct, but—

The president said there was no ground for any imputation upon him; adding, however, that if he was not satisfied, and still wished to show his anxiety in favour of his client, the best thing he could do would be to get him admitted to the mad house at Charenton-le-Pont.

The Gazette des Tribunaux then says that the singular manner of the would-be Esculapian drew a great crowd after him, and as he left the court he said, “Long live the ministers!” This exclamation, says the journalist, “if any thing else was wanting, certainly shows that the doctor is a candidate for Charenton.”

THE DOCTOR.

Mr. Editor,—There is an article in a corner of your paper this evening, headed “Sanctuary of Princeton, N. J.,” stating that 1800 students have graduated since the commencement of the college in 1757, that each student resided on an average 3 years, making 5400 residents in a year; by what arithmetic this computation has been made, I cannot conceive; 1800 students in 72 years would make 25 students for one year, or if they averaged 3 years at the college, there would be 79 residents. The college, however, I believe, was suspended for some years, during the revolution, and there have been at times, upwards of 100 students at the College.

October 28.

From the Boston Courier.

A gentleman who arrived in the Delorah, at this port, from Surinam, (Sept. 12) has stated to us the following:—A Brazilian ship, (formerly the Suffolk, an American) after having taken on board about 20 slaves, on the coast of Africa, was captured by an American frigate, and the African slaves were taken by a Dutch cruiser, and sent to the above port, where they have been already noticed. On the trial of the privateersmen, one of them, (an Irishman) who had been allowed as evidence against his countrymen, testified that the crew of the ship were put into the long boat, and on being cast off from the brig, the contents of a heavy cannon, (mounted on a swivel,) was discharged at them, and all of them killed; and that the ship was retained and filled with valuable goods, plundered from vessels of different nations.

The evidence was corroborated by the negroes, as far as their means of knowledge would permit—they were in iron below at the time, but heard the boat hoisted out, &c. and immediately after the report of a large gun on deck, and on being released, the privateersmen were gone. Both vessels were completely wrecked, and the debris and men (about 30 or 40 in number) who were on board at the time of the capture, the sentence of the court was sent to Holland, and a ship of war had just arrived, bringing, as was reported, the King's approval, and that the execution of the privateersmen would take place in a few days. The ship being declared unworthy by the court, the ship was broken up, and it was said the brig would share the same fate. The latter was called the General Francisco Doriga, and said to have been built in Baltimore. A public sale of the property found on board the ship at the time the Dutch captured her, took place at Surinam, once a week—cargo said to be worth $100,000.

From the Boston Courier.

The beautiful planets, Venus and Jupiter, which have lately made so brilliant an appearance in the south West, immediately after the setting of the sun, and which have been approaching each other several weeks, will be nearest to each other this and to-morrow evening; Venus being 2 1/2 degrees south of Jupiter, after which they will recede. The latter will soon be lost in the superior light of the Sun, but Venus will appear to recede from the Sun, until the 26th of December, and will increase in splendor until the 13th of January, about which time her light will be great enough to create very distinct shadows, and to enable any one to ascertain the time indicated by a watch.

BONAPARTE AND BERNADOTTE.

Bourbonnais, in an unpublished analyse of the interesting Memoirs, states that Bernadotte never forgot Bernadotte for not having succeeded his plans at the time of the overthrow of the Directory.

“Time (he says) served only to increase this feeling of ill-will, and the further Napoleon advanced towards absolute power, the more he seemed to dislike those who had refused to support him in the outset of his adventurous career. At the same time, the persons about the First Consul, who were well versed in the art of flattery, took care to multiply reports and calumnies against Bernadotte. I recollect one day when there was to be a grand audience at the Tuilleries, Bernadotte was so much out of humor that I could not help inquiring what had disturbed him. ‘I can restrain myself no longer (said he angrily), I will read Bernadotte a lesson to-day. He will be here, of course, and he shall have a reprimand, happen what will. It is time to have an end of this!’

“I never saw the First Consul so furiously out of temper. He was so exceedingly violent that I dreaded the hour appointed for the audience. He left me to descend to the grand saloon, but I managed to get down before him. Luckily the very first person I beheld was Bernadotte—he was alone, and standing in the embrasure of a window, looking out on the Carrousel. ‘General,’ said I, running up to him, ‘go away, I treat you. I have good reasons for giving you this advice, as I will explain to you by and by.’ Bernadotte, seeing my extreme eagerness of manner, and aware of the sentiments of esteem and friendship I entertained for him, consented to withdraw. I was heartily glad of it, for I knew the General's high spirit and keen sense of honour well enough, to be convinced that he would not endure the smart rebuff which Bernadotte had prepared for him. My scheme was a success by all the success I hoped for. The First Consul suspected nothing, and merely perceived he had missed his victim. When the reception was over, he said to me, ‘Would you like to see Bernadotte?’ Bernadotte did not come. ‘So much the better for him,’ Bernadotte replied. ‘Nothing more was said in the subject.’ The First Consul, on ascending to the apartments of Josephine, found me in his cabinet, and consequently he could suspect nothing; besides, my conversation with Bernadotte did not occupy five minutes. Bernadotte has always been very grateful for the little service I rendered him on this occasion.—Courier Journal.

By the close of the winter, and that his Grace will give his first entertainment there on St. George's day.

Craven's Bravery.—The bravery of the Cossacks is very romantic. When the French were in garrison at Antwerp, in 1812, the French officer in the French service, being obliged to repel a party of Cossacks who had approached close to the city, was advancing with his part along the high road, the enemy retreating to lose them. He was 100 or 150 yards behind the rest of his men who were going along in a column on each side of the road, when the Cossacks suddenly started and came off at a gallop to a smart trot towards him. The officer, supposing he brought a flag of truce, desired his men not to fire; when within about 15 yards he met B. He deliberately leveled a carbine and fired. Fortunately the carbine could not have been stemmed down, as the ball struck his left breast but was stopped by the padding of his coat; it felt it, looked down and saw the ball fall in.

A general meeting of the Stockholders of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company, was held at the City of Philadelphia, on the 24th of October, 1921.

A letter was read from JAMES C. FISHER, Esq., announcing his resignation as President of the Company, which was accepted, and it was on motion, Resolved, That the Executive Committee be authorized to select JAMES C. FISHER, Esq. for his distinguished and faithful devotion to the duties of President of the Company and that the chairman, in communicating the resolution, may be authorized to retain of the services he has for many years bestowed on a great useful work.

The meeting then proceeded to an election, and the close of the winter, and that his Grace will give his first entertainment there on St George's day.

THE BRAVERY OF A FRENCHMAN.—The bravery of a Frenchman is very notable. When the French were in garrison at Antwerp, in 1832, on the 15th of October, a French officer in the French service, being obliged to repel a party of Cossacks who had approached the city, was advancing with his party along the high road, the enemy retreating to the left. He was 100 or 150 yards behind them. Of his men who were going along in the rear, each side of the road, when the Cossacks suddenly turned round to come from behind, he was the first to turn round, and to point a smart shot towards him. The officer, supposing he brought a flag of truce, desired him not to fire; when within about 15 yards he fired, and he deliberately leveled a carbine and fired. Fortunately the cartridge could not have been primed down, as the ball struck his left breast, and he was stopped by the padding of his coat; it fell, it looked down and saw the ball falling.

CARRON IRON WORKS.—It is gratifying to be able to state that the extensive iron works of Carron are feeling none of the general depression which at present prevails in the manufacturing districts. Upwards of five months ago they received an order for field pieces, and although they have since been making at the rate of nearly twenty a week, the requisite number is not nearly completed. Terrible as these "metal engines" are, those the Carron Company are now finishing seem intended to be doubly destructive. Some of them will be four feet in diameter, and will weigh upwards of half of their size from the simple fact, that they are completely ready for use they weigh each for three tons. A number of howitzers are also in preparation, and, instead of the usual length from three to four feet, they run from eight to nine, and are intended to throw shells far

The poor fellow immediately went home the mutilated limb.—A few hours after, master of the factory happened to meet a man's, and, accosting him in a tone of sympathy, said, "I'm very sorry thy father has lost a finger."—"Lost it?" exclaimed the lad, "no; he has no loss at all—he has it in his pocket."

In the paper for Feb. 27, 1802, we find the following notice of the death of one of Whitworth Doctors:—

"Lately died at Whitworth, in Lancashire, Mr. Taylor, commonly known by the name of 'Whitworth Doctor,' and whose fame was so great as to procure him the honour of attending on Lord Nelson, and Lord Cornwallis. The loss of this man and his brother, who was partner, is singularly curious."

"By profession they were farmers, and to that fact it both a two-legged and a four-legged patient were presented at the same time."
